Tension

It allows a violin to produce sound. Ability to manipulate it in ones own muscles seperates a millionaire athlete from general society. Celestial bodies move in a mathematically intricate two-step; constantly drawn in every direction at once.

It's presence brings out the best, and worst, in all of us. We live, and strive, in an environment inundated with competing strains. We exist, the world humming like an accelerating engine around us,

IN TENSION.

College life, from our point of view, seems especially straining. Goshen is a relatively small school, and often students and faculty are pulled in a number of directions. Students sometimes skip class to leave for a track meet only to be driven back early for the 7pm curtain of the Spring Play. This year, others sat, text in hand, through hours of practice for The Magic Flute, trying to memorize both blocking instructions, and the scientific names of the major bones of the human body. In general, we have all held a balance between our studies, physical exertions (work, sports), organized activities, and sleep.

This book seeks to represent this individual tension, as well as the tensions that exist between students and administration, "liberals" and "conservatives," athletes and artists, linear and abstract thinkers. Whether in its greater inclusion of artistic endeavors, or its excerpts of public discussion throughout the year, the purpose is to grasp the unique balance that Goshen College struggles to hold.

"The test of a first-rate intelligence is the ability to hold two opposed ideas in mind at the same time and still be able to function".

-F. Scott Fitzgerald

This history doesn't make Goshen College unique, though. Students everywhere decry their administrations, and other financial representatives turn down proposals that don't make cents. It is another type of tension that lets Goshen College, in the words of President Showalter, "aspire to be uncommon rather than common". It is the fact that despite the everpresent differences of this community, the community still functions. Also, it forces its individual members to grow in that functioning, to hold in tension, themselves, and the rest of the world.

Goshen College's past year has been a study in tension. Issues sprouted often and early as the year progressed, though opinion board discussion seemed to languish. Instead Record articles and informal discussion, along with the occasional clearness meeting or student forum served as the primary methods of discussion. With their return to school, students were greeted with an announcement of a moratorium on the issue of LBGA club status. It took several months to grant club status to The Advocates, who formed to represent the LBGA. During that time, issues of drinking came to the fore, with Interim Dean of Students Phyllis Carter acting on her belief in "unlimited liability", stopping a 21st birthday party and sparking protests from students and a clearness meeting for off-campus residents. The new year found Stephan Moyer's idea for a senior meal plan gaining support, which after debate, ended when the administration said no, and the students found a loophole that accomplished the same goal.

Conservative evangelist Brother Jim spars with a crowd of students over theological differences. The conservative/liberal division of campus continued to give rise to jokes and disagreements.

Academic Dean Paul Keim expands on his ideal for a liberal arts general education program to senior Anne Glick during a student forum to discuss the issue.

The opinion board saw a flurry of comments near the end of the year.

A community forum on race revealed many areas in need of improvement in the town of Goshen.

A PAX vigil against bombing Iraq created tension on campus and in the larger community.

Alcohol consumption and administrative intervention with students over 21 became a point of contention during the fall semester

Beside the Ganges

Jessica L. Smucker

Eighteen hours behind your breath panting everywhere you've been, I come to your campsite, unzip
my traveling clothes, your tent, your wrap-around linens.
You are sleeping, falling from the sky
which is mine, the mountains you stole from me.

Here I come with ransom for you coughing blood and mucus, eighteen hours of ardor clogging my breath like ashy wind beside the Ganges, resurrecting scenic goat paths for you, mountain nooks, shepherds' tunes, cold-water baths.

but your mountains, your wishes can't fathom me anymore - how are your nights?
are they chilly or warm?
do you cry?
do you call out my name?

Eighteen hours behind, I can hear you marveling, mulling over crimson cliché for the mountains, your reverence, November's sky, your birth and willing death.

I can follow your colorless eyes to a rainbow of mud inching downward, simmering effortlessly in the valley below with no oven, no limpid incentive but the sky before a sunless rain - crystalline, then clouded, compromising.

The Promise to the Land

Thomas V. Bona

"Now it's the women's turn" - Kurt Vonnegut

My sisters in Christ pass the peace with more passion than my male body ever learned.
When they embrace, the shine on their face is as true as the peace dove that flies over the smoke of our wars.

Their bodies engulf the Eucharist, the form of Christ, the peaceful male in our midst.
Their wrapping arms squeeze out all harm and fuel the planes that spray relief over the dry and torn land.

My sisters in Christ reclaim the night and dance to drums to celebrate the temple they live in.
Moving like founts that wash pain out their prayers land, spread and revive the dead bones we left behind.

Their bodies live the Great Commission by going with heads and hands held high into the world.
Marching out of line with skins of new wine these soldiers have no battle to fight and no one to push away again.

My sisters in Christ rebuild my temple like Solomon's wise wives they made the bricks.
Working by firm hand they form a band, a solid foundation that won't crumble replacing the gunner turrets that lay in rubble.

Just Me
Marta Klimesova

lace-covered bruise, a ballad

Austin Kaufman

In the torn photograph of the girl, that I found,
she is dressed fit to kill,
and maybe she will,

maybe she will.

From the look on her face, it's difficult to trace where the pain began.

Perhaps her old man,

perhaps her old man.

Her thin-lipped half-grin that she paints on paper thin, hides a voice that's gone unheard.

No, never a word,

never a word.

Oh, all the love that she has not known
could fill the sky above.

And that boy she now clings to, won't bring her joy, with what he calls love.

The thought of that date and his impossible weight, when she was ripped open at the seams, when he stifled her screams, he stifled her dreams.

Her cold, shifting eyes do their best to disguise the fear that wells up inside, that she just can't quite hide, she just can't quite hide.

Her once pretty face, has turned commonplace and she looks a little used, like a lace-covered bruise, a lace-covered bruise.

Oh, all the love that she has not known,
could fill the sky above.

And every promise they'd made, that night he betrayed in an act that he called love.

In the torn photograph, like a cold epitaph,
she is dressed fit to kill,
and maybe she will,

maybe she will.

Quality

Steve Yutzy

you're my quality, darling my quality
we could live so free, like quality

polyester button-down from the thrift store across town sitting on the porch at 510 there's a table there, a hanging light and some chairs we can kick back and have a beer with my quality, darling my quality

we could live so free, like quality

this summer it's sinking in, we're marrying off our best friends its a long road halfway done we've put in the time, made our living's just fine and idealized it all in our songs like my quality, darling my quality

we could live so free, like quality she hit the ground running, and never looked back but i thought i saw forever in her eyes its crazy times like this that make me remember her last kiss man, i hope its not the last

with my quality, darling my quality
we could live so free, like quality

just finished up the best years of my life now I need a job, I need a wife that's what they tell me anyway but when the smoke and clouds all clear the sun shines through, Graduation's here I guess Goshen's not such a bad place after all. . .

to call my quality, darling my quality
we could live so free, like quality

spending gas on the lonely road, these days i'm working far from home and just yesterday my radio died its a very dim world its true, but you, my friend, shine through this town won't soon forget your name

'cause your my quality, darling my quality
we could live so free, like quality quality, strumming my harmony quality, whatever you need you're my quality, my quality
we could live so free, like quality

Senior's Lament

Allen Bonhert

Running, scratching, clawing
Trying to tread the murky Water of senior year
Am I a student? Yes
Am I a teacher? Yes
Am I a history major? Yes Am I torn and pulled by All the conflicting roles? Yes Standing with one foot firmly
In a scholarly role

With another foot squarely
In a professional role Early to bed, early to rise...
Right. That MIGHT work!
Late to bed, early to rise...
I'm just run down, poor and Intellectually irrelevant
I wanna watch the Olympics!
No time to
"On reserve at the library" 60 pages to read Lesson Plans to write Record to edit
News groups to enliven Bethel to beat Tests to take Aerobics to do (in the water)
Soccer/Basketball/Volleyball to play
C-league championship to win Relationships to maintain Grandfather to bury
And above all of this hangs
That dark, ominous cloud
The aftermath of graduation
What to do then?
Too busy to think about that

Now, though Can't stop to consider it That feeling's returned - I'm forgetting Shortchanging
Shrifting
Something
Gotta run, no time to write I'll e-mail you later
When I have 5 minutes
To spare
But now I need to go Change roles
Costumes

And be interested in Wilson's 14 points

Squirrel Series #34

Espri L. Beauregard

It's a twilight noon in Goshen, the trees are dripping dew.
The squirrels haven't seen the sun for maybe a month or two.
They scratch their black and fluffy heads, they flip their nice black tails,
And they kindly offer once a week to go and fetch my mail.
Yes, it's another Goshen Winter;
the days are dark and bleak, But we have our little fluffy friends to help us through the week.
There is a squirrel called Harvey who helps me when I'm blue, He does my homework every night and sometimes papers too.

My profs don't mind, they think I'm cute, if maybe a little slow,
And it helps that I make sure to take all classes credit/no.

Stars

Sarah Sales

The sky is so big,
yet I am so small.
They talk about billions of light years,
I am preoccupied with the moment.
They say light travels at 638,000 AU.
I am just trying to get out of bed.
Billions of masses of burning gas, and I know there is one in my stomach.
Comets and moons,
Nebulas and quasars.
What does all this mean?

God is so big,
yet I am so small.
God created time,
But I wonder if He counts days.
God could beat light in a race, yet He takes time to love even me.
God created every burning mass, even the one in my stomach.
Comets and moons,
Nebulas and quasars.
Thank God, He knows what it all means.

Dot to Dot

Austin Kaufmann

There's a ring around the moon tonight,
And I just want to hold you tight,
And sing rings around you all night long,
And wrap you within my song.

You're the brightest star I see tonight.
So wish I may and wish I might,
Have this wish that I just made,
for this feeling to never fade away.

So let's play dot to dot
with the stars overhead
And make believe
it could last forever.
Let's play dot to dot
with the stars overhead
And make believe
it could last forever.

There's a fire in this frozen sky.
It's almost enough to make me cry.
I'm overwhelmed by everything,
And you inspire me to sing.

So as I stare into this brilliant sky,
I find myself wondering why,
Why you must so soon depart,
When you've just begun to consume my heart.

So let's play dot to dot
with the stars overhead
And make believe
it could last forever.
Let's play dot to dot
with the stars overhead
And make believe
it could last forever.

You're the brightest star I see tonight.
So wish I may and wish I might,
Have this wish that I just made,
for this feeling to never fade away.

Nectar

Wendell Miller

My eyes behold a flower whose bursting petals fall like cherries, like water, infused with power-- a power deep and raw.
I tarry.

Around I circle, around
She draws me in to her.
I fight.
I am a bee who has found the bearer of the richest nectar.
Sweet delight.

We rock in the wind so gently.
I nestle within her petals, enwrapped
in a delicate string of serenity.
We murmur secrets and riddles unwrapped.

A moment, then I depart. My leap leaves her trembling--small and red in the sunlight.
I drift onward, but her image burns deep and still deeper, drenching my head through the night.

Untitled

In the days when the many-feathered jaguar-god flew through the azure sky and through the forest with its heavy-creeped trunks and redyellogreenblue leaves, under the (powergiving lifesharing eyedazzling) gaze of the sun the People lived in harmony with the earthmother (giver of life, of bountiful blossoms, of multihued butterflies, of firefeathered flocks of birds).

The People were sister of the goldenyellow corn people and brother of the goldenorange squash people
and friend of the shadowgreen bean people.

The People wore the shape of the horse (the shape of the bearers of the chariot of the sun, running across the sky the shape of the bearers of the chariot of the sea-god, running across the waves running running tails flicking foam, frenzied pawing of the clouds) they wore the shape of the horse, and they remembered the many-feathered jaguar-god and they knew the earthmother.

The People lived in peace with the goldenyellow corn people with the goldenorange squash people with the shadowgreen bean people and feared only the jungle cat, the (scaled slithering) snake and the earthmother smiled and gave to the people all that they needed (water grass shade shelter) and more (jeweled eyes looking out from the crimson center of an orchid plumage flamebright and emeraldgreen and bloodred flashing across vision's range).

The People lived in peace until the many-feathered jaguar-god was forgotten under the weight of seasons past and the earthmother was a name (breath passing through lips) and not a heart friend (breath shared lips on lips) and still the People were sister of the goldenyellow corn people
and brother of the goldenorange squash people
and friend of the shadowgreen bean people.

One day the earthmother shook (trembled fear and loathing raced through her) the People tossed their heads stamped their hooves wondered what the earthmother's tremors meant and the brightburning eye of the sun was covered by wings and a shadow fell on the People they arched their necks (nervous sweat gathered fell) looked up and saw descending towards them birds they had never seen before not (brightfeathered earsplitting) macaws not (rubyflame liquidemerald flash of diamond) hummingbirds not (greenscarlet bodied tailfeathers majestic bodylengths) quetzals but eagles with outstretched (curved turkish dagger) claws and (thick thorn hook beaks) dark bodied (dark as the deep rich soil) with white heads (yellow eyes glinting glaring) and white tails and the eagles did not know earthmother's name or the ways of the People.

And the eagles took the land of the People for their home and their nests they forced the People to forsake the goldenyellow corn people and the goldenorange squash people and the shadowgreen bean people the People trembled (skin quivered rippled brook-like) and were afraid.

Sometimes the People would resist go back to the ways the earthmother taught find the goldenyellow corn people the goldenorange squash people
the shadowgreen bean people and the eagles would find them and when the sun's eye next saw the People they would be stone (cold silent still) and those who found them would weep.

The young mares were frightened (quivered quaked shied away) of the eagles who saw the mares' shining coats, long straight legs, deep liquid eyes, grace of movement and the mares were frightened of the daily (sun up sun down) journey (alone to bring water for their families) to the lake.

The People lived in fear their ties to the goldenyellow corn people
the golden orange squash people
the shadow green bean people were broken earthmother was remembered (longing heartbreak) but forbidden to them.

The young mares wept, and gave birth to winged horses.

A Look Around
Brian Weaver

Untitled
Ryan Good

Seems kinda ludicrous, doesn't it? And yet I'm returning back to it in full force. ("You have a day to celebrate mothers?" "Yes, and fathers too. But not children; every other day is children's day." "Oh.")

But at the same time, Ivorians probably have holiday traditions that seem ludicrous to us too. I think what is important is having days we play and act silly and leave our rational selves behind the bush when we change into an Easter Bunny suit. As ridiculous as white shoes and pushing painted eggs are, they are reminders of the human need to be silly and non-logical. It's good to have days when we sit down with our neighbors and enemies, tie our hands behind our backs and see how much watermelon we can eat in a given period of time.

What I don't see in RCI is this need fulfilled. In the families I have lived, we have celebrated nothing. Perhaps I'm being insensitive and applying Western values when cultural understanding is needed. And while I can rationalize the lack of national unity and large religious, tribal, historical and/or linguistic chasms as the reason for no holidays, it seems to me that routine would break a person.

Maybe tonight my family will don purple, pointy hats, invite neighbors and serve a flaming goat. "Palm Sunday?" I'll ask "Or is it the full moon or do you do this the second to last Sunday of March every year?"

"For the hell of it," my father will reply, as he serves flaming goat to Bakari, my neighbor who just cracked a joke to the Fulani woman who sells tomatoes up the street.

But that won't happen. Tonight, we will watch the news, eat tó and the kids will study while John and I sit outside, swatting flies, complaining of the heat and talking about something like education, health-care, free-market economies. "Issue o' the evening," I call it.

That's life in Ferké. And oddly enough, I like it.

wind rider

others say, I have seen her in the marketplace buying the shimmering cloth of the merchants' journeys looking for the sweetest dates, the ripest olives carrying oil for the lamps of her house walking lightly in her courtyard, listening to the water's song they tell me, I saw her go to the palace dressed in her finest, wearing earrings of silver precious stones in the rings of her fingers gold on her throat, and woven in her veil protected by two men, with her maid beside her

not for you the pleasures of the watered courtyard
the fountains filling the walls with light
for you will sleep over the earth's heart
and ride across her dust-blown skin

but I have known you outside the city's walls, far from the palace you are not a virgin, watching your lamp, waiting to be summoned you ride wherever your heart calls you, leads you like the hawk with her wings, city walls cannot hold you yes, you ride the winds, dressed in rough cloth your heart beats fiercely with love for the people for those who live on the gifts of the earth the people whose houses can move with the camels whose lives are not bounded by high city walls but only by the wind's four directions, by the steel-blue heights of the sky

not for you the pleasures of the watered courtyard
the fountains filling the walls with light
for you will sleep over the earth's heart
and ride across her dust-blown skin

"This was simply a growing season for us. Due to extenuating circumstances, we did not play any matches except for an exhibition with a high school team (which we easily won). Nonetheless, we practiced twice a week and occasionally scrimaged a local team for playing experience. I enjoyed learning about volleyball, and I hope we have better luck next year."

We also are a small band, and we also have a covenant. Our own is radical indeed in the world of higher education and in American culture.

We are engaged in a great struggle against powers and principalities. For me that struggle is never our students. You are not the enemy. And I am not your enemy. The struggle is against a consumer culture, powerful and seductive media images, and huge international corporations like tobacco companies.

I ask you today to join me in the struggle to find radical freedom, to love each other no matter how close or how far you or they may be to the high ideals of Goshen College and to keep your eyes on the prize--the promise of a new humanity.

In a way I feel slighted, almost cheated that I don't have four years of history with the rest of you. What I do have is an appreciation for the small-school environment I found here. I admit it took some getting used to to call my teachers by their first names. I also found a slew of activities to be involved in, and I am grateful for the friendships made in those pursuits. I only regret that I didn't get involved earlier.

As I prepare myself for graduation and my next step in life I feel a great sense of loss. I will miss the thirteen nursing students that I have had every class with the last four years, my housemates, and my close friends--all of whom have been there through all the tears of failure and joys of success. I will miss the professors that have pushed me to succeed and the community that has supported me the last four years. They all have helped me become who I am today, and I cherish that.

The door that leads to the Record office never shut properly until two months ago.
 The violent slamming always let those in the hub know of the comings and goings of people. Today when I shut the door for the last time, it will shut softly behind me, sealing memories in walls covered with pictures and stickers and other unprintables; walls that essentially sum up my last four years.

When we seek justice because of what God has given to us through the bread and wine of the Holy Spirit in community. . . When all we learn, both in college and beyond, is a form of loving. . . When we are not afraid of dreams, signs, and wonders which have come and which will come. . . Then we live in a new place. We live in a place of peace. Wherever we go, we bring peace. Whatever we plant grows peace, and whatever work we do becomes peace.

Go now in peace in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. But before you go, sing hymn number one as if you mean it. Follow Kristin's lead and sing it as the Spirit leads you--reverently, lustily, tearfully, or quietly. Sing it to your parents. Sing it to your child. Sing it to the friends around you and far away. Sing it to your first employer, your graduate school professors, to the poor, to the rich, to the people of Ireland, Israel, Palestine, Indonesia, Guatemala.

Sing it as though you finally understand the place you have been these last four years. God bless you as you leave here, taking with you a real place, a place you will only finally know when you draw your last breath. Dying and living, we increase God's justice and God's peace.

How optimistic was it to call a landlord before a party even started? Were the residents of the house treated as responsible adults, or were they seen as potentially errant children? I don't remember having recieved . . . informational literature any other year--but I do remember having always felt treated in accordance to my age.

Does the average GC student think that racism is not an issue on campus and within the larger Goshen community?

During my first semester, I experienced segregation like I had never before. In the cafeteria, all the international students sat together, apart from other students. When I tried to sit at other tables, I often felt awkward. I also felt out of place on my dorm floor. Two weeks into the semester, I broke down and cried inconsolably in the Leaf Raker when asked how I liked Goshen.

I still have real questions and problems with offering a "meal plan" for a specific group of individuals that is priced in such a way that would be in conflict with other meal plan pricing structure we already have and also in direct conflict with policies we have in place to encourage or "reward" on campus vs. off-campus living. I do however like the idea of getting more of the GC community into the dining hall to experience the social interaction and campus involvement that [it] brings. I challenge you to look carefully at the real issue at the heart of what you want. Is it really better campus socialization and interaction? Or is it cheap meals for a specific group, without thought of how it affects anyone else?

-James Histand, Vice-President for Finance in letter to Stephen Moyer and Student Senate President Peter Scott

Peter J. Scott

I am highly amused that the campus guardians of peace and justice, Pax, would travel [to the town meeting in] Ohio so that they could join in an opposing voice . . . rudely interrupting Secretary of State Albright and showing time and time again that they have no class. Pax and the activists on campus will have no success in altering the plans of Bill Clinton to bomb Iraq. Pax has yet to figure out that politics is a game and you must know the rules of the game before you can get anywhere. That is why Pax will never have as much influence inside the Beltway as I will.

I must respond to Hallman's opinion about the action taken by the Pax club. I do not consider this situation a game, but if we must resort to political strategies in order to make our voice heard in Washington, then I think Pax has done a fine job. [They] have been covered in eight local media sources and . . . I have no doubt that this kind of publicity reaches the national government at some level. But again, this is more than politics. War is hell and Christians are called to stop it, no matter how futile our attempts may seem.

I think my disillusion with the Mennonite church became distinctly clear at Philadelphia '93. The youth I was among worshipped like charismatic Christians. Raising their hands in the air, they sang terrible songs like "Our God is an Awesome God." For one week, I interacted with kids who made fun of women, homosexuals and non-Christians . . . but I don't recall . . . folks addressing issues of peace and justice and humanity. One guy next to me whispered to me that those who believed in evolution were among both the stupid and the damned. . . . And while I now know that GC is not Philadelphia '93, I still feel the same sense of confusion when I step off campus and into other Mennonite communities. I still am not readily willing to accept such a faith as that.

-senior Adam Nafziger, Record Editorial, March 12, 1998

Some comments in Adam Nafziger's editorial last week implied that charismatic worship is not valid. By charismatic worship, we mean the outward bodily expression of praise. . . . Strangely, GC seems to accept every other belief, philosophy, and religious practice. In one GC class students were encouraged to participate in meditations that were rooted in the practices of the Shaman. As far as we understand, these are contrary to the Bible. So, why is it that students are encouraged to participate in these meditations, but biblical spiritual gifts, such as prophesy and prayer languages, are rarely mentioned in classes? It is ironic that some of the same people who look down on charismatic Christian practices are the same people who shake their fingers at others for being closed minded.

The man, a GC alum . . . [who had] fallen on hard times, had to stay outside, though, because of the cafeteria policy that forbids students with 7-a-week meal plans from using extra meals to pay for friends.

I am angry about the shameful way in which this college discourages hospitality. I don't care all that much if GC gets 120 of my dollars. But when I have already paid that money and I have meals left over and I'm expected to pay again to let a guest in the door, you can forget it. I've heard a lot of talk about requiring meal plans to "build community" and the like. What is that supposed to mean in the context of encouraging students to turn away the stranger (or guest or GC alum) in need by refusing students an economical option of hospitality?

-from an opinion board letter to Larry Rupp (Director of Housing) and Joe Rondinelli (Manager of Marriott) by juniors Tim Godshall and Bryce Miller

We do not believe we have "unjust rules" in the dining hall. . . . When you take food from the dining hall for someone who has not purchased a meal plan, you are adding to the food costs of Marriott and are affecting their "bottom line." Marriott eventually passes increased expenses along to Goshen College and GC passes them on to the students. Although one small incident has very little effect, it does make a difference when multiplied by similar situations and when one considers the principles involved in what you described. To help someone else, you essentially took from others. Instead of making a personal sacrifice, you unilaterally forced others to make the sacrifice and pay for the meal.

Almost every day as I go about my business, I encounter groups of students taking their "smoke break" near the corner of South Main Street and GraRoy Drive. How can it be that intelligent, well informed young people get involved in this destructive practice?

-Russel A. Liechty, Letter to the Record, March 26, 1998

I believe the fear of being seen inhaling exists among some smokers at Goshen College. [They] have created euphemisms for the dread habit. "Going to the vicinity" is the most popular. I prefer "taking the long way." This language has developed for me because of the looks of astonishment I receive when I tell someone that I am going to smoke a cigarette.

Special Thank You's go out to Public Relations and the Record for the extra photos, to Computing Services for their technical assistance, Evangel Press for again printing the Mapleleaf, and to all the people who helped out in small ways.

This book is, I hope, up to your expectations. We tried several new things this year including the exhibition section, and the arts section. Unfortunately, there are a number of inconsistencies and shortcomings to this book as well. We hope you can forgive these. If planning and time were unlimited, it would improve significantly.

Specifically to the entire staff, thank you.
